CONCLUSION

The system of speech exercises begins with exercise which makes the learners to remember a group of sentences, connected in meaning. This exercise is close to the self-dictation. As soon as learners master the ability to express thoughts in their own words, they learn to use the following types of exercises: narration, story, description, composition, writing letters. The narration requires a certain preparation in the classroom under the guidance of a teacher. The teacher together with students should select some needed constructions from what they heard, divide the text into semantic passages, and reveal the main content. After such preparatory work in the classroom narration can become a homework. Thus, it is always important to take into account the specific characteristic features of the foreign language as well as the level of training of the students in FLA. The use of student-centered approach will help the teacher to find the best ways to prepare for a successful completing the tasks in the «Letter» section of the CEFR language competence test.
